Gwendolyn

Red Cross transportation services have helped many in the community get to important appointments that they would otherwise be unable to attend. Two of these are

Rebecca Blackman and her mother Gwendolyn Parham. They began using Red Cross transportation services because they were unable to drive and their doctor was located far away. Rebecca is very pleased with the transportation service, stating, "This has always been a very positive experience."

Rebecca feels that one of the best parts of this service is the drivers, saying that "the drivers are very nice and helpful." They are always on time picking her up from her home in order to bring her to the appointment as well as picking her up after the appointment – she has never had to wait.

One specific story Rebecca recalls is one time when she was very sick with the stomach flu and did not think that she could make it to her doctor's appointment. She called Peter from the Red Cross, who sets up her transportation pick-ups, and he told her that he had the same illness a week ago and that the remedy is to buy lots of chicken noodle soup and only eat that until she was better. She did just that and said that it was so nice that he cared enough to help her when she was feeling ill.
